She may be young in years, but not in talent

Brew pub hosts free show with Lindsey Mae

The talented singer/songwriter who will perform at the Dogfish Head brew pub in downtown Rehoboth Beach on Saturday may be the youngest person in the room.

Lindsey Mae is an 18-year-old performer who lives just outside Saratoga Springs, N.Y. She picked up an acoustic guitar when she was 15 and began writing lyrics and music almost immediately. She played coffee shops throughout upstate New York while in high school. Since signing with manager Randy Eisen's company, her touring schedule has stretched to Boston, New York City and beyond.

Mae is promoting her newly-released EP, an eponymous recording featuring five tunes with a gentle pop sheen. The original songs include "Cable Car" and "Paper Mache."

"Each song shows a different side to me, and a different story," she said. "After just three years, I've grown a lot of strength in songwriting and performing by using my life experiences to propel me forward."

While some of the music is reminiscent of Jewel, that performer could almost be considered a heritage artist to Mae's generation. Her biggest influence? KT Tunstall, who is best known for her 2005 single "Black Horse and the Cherry Tree." Mae was also influenced by artists such as Norah Jones, Tristan Prettyman, Missy Higgins and A Fine Frenzy.

The EP was produced by Hal Cragin, who has produced (and played bass on) records by both A Fine Frenzy and Iggy Pop.

"Music is all about the story behind the writer, inside the noise, between the written words," Mae said. "It's about the story that comes with it and the one you make of it. It's the spaces left empty between the lines for you to fill with your own story, to finish the story."
